Some of the world's biggest casino operators in Macau, the Chinese territory that's the epicenter of global gaming, are starting to deploy hidden cameras, facial recognition technology, digitally-enabled poker chips and baccarat tables to track which of their millions of customers are likely to lose the most money.

The new technology uses algorithms that process the way customers behave at the betting table to determine their appetite for risk. In general, the higher the risk appe-

It's not unusual for casinos to have surveillance cameras for security and to detect cheating, with Las Vegas operators utilising RFID-enabled chips that they can disable if they're stolen out of the casino. But these new technologies go a step further in tracking and rating every customer, building up a trea sure trove of data.

There are three major companies supplying casino operators with the A.I.-enabled technology: Walker Digital, Dallmeier, and Japanbased Angel Playing Cards.

While the companies differ somewhat in the technology that they offer, the general setup is this: gamblers' betting behaviour is tracked through high-resolution cameras and RFID-enabled poker chips and tables, with the intelligence gleaned flowing back into a centralised database where a risk profile of the individual is then created. The trails left by planes in the sky have a more damaging effect on the climate than all the carbon dioxide ever emitted from their engines, a study has revealed. The tracks — called contrails - linger in the sky as ice clouds and trap heat in the Earth's atmosphere. This is an unaccounted source of climate warming from air travel. And researchers from the Institute of Atmospheric Physics (IAP) in Germany now say the problem is set to triple by 2050.

"It is important to recognise the significant impact of non-CO2 emissions, such as contrail cirrus, on climate and to take those effects into consideration,' said lead author Lisa Bock from the German Aerospace Centre at the Institute of Atmospheric Physics.

The Corsica agreement, which is the UN's scheme to offset air traffic carbon emissions from 2020, ignores the non-CO2 climate impacts of aviation. However, the latest findings will raise alarm over the climate impact of contrails. Researchers say the relative increase in radiation caused by contrails will be greater than that of come more fuel efficient. Overall air traffic is set to be four times larger in 2050 compared with 2006 levels, but planes are generally fly-linger in the sky as ice clouds and trap heat in the atmosphere. This is an unaccounted source of climate warming from air travel ing slightly higher, which helps the formation of contrails in the tropics. Areas over North America and Europe will be most affected as this is where most traffic is, according to the study published in 'Atmospheric Chemistry and Physics'.

Bock said: "There are still some uncertainties regarding the overall climate impact of contrail cirrus and, in particular, their impact on surface temperatures because contrail cirrus themselves and their effects on the surface are ongoing topics of research. But it's clear they warm the atmosphere.'

More efficient aircraft would reduce the number of soot particles emitted by engines, which could reduce the climate impact of contrail cirrus. However, larger reductions than the projected 50% decrease in soot emissions are needed. THE INDEPENDENT
